

Dear Supporter,

In just over a month, the next legislative session will begin. And when it does, we can't afford to waste a second.

The legislative session is just 105 days long. That means we'll have just 105 days to make progress in providing long overdue funding to our schools, protecting our climate, and funding critical repairs and improvements to our roads, bridges, and transportation infrastructure.

The session brings another kind of deadline -- a fundraising deadline. If we want to accomplish these goals in that very short window, we need to build as much momentum as we can today. We need to show hard numbers, and right now that means fundraising totals.

Washington law requires me to stop accepting contributions 30 days before the legislative session begins. This Friday is the last day I can raise money for over four months, and this week is the last chance to help me build the momentum we need.

That's why we must raise $25,000 by Friday's midnight deadline -- and why it's crucial you show your support now.

Will you make a contribution now to help me reach our $25,000 goal -- before Friday's MIDNIGHT deadline?

We have far too much to accomplish to let the next legislative session devolve into political theater. We've seen Republicans do this all over the country, and we can't let it happen here.

Your support today will help build the momentum we need to move forward on our priorities and help my team stay focused on the critical work at hand. Remember Friday isn't just your last chance to contribute before the session begins -- it's your last chance to contribute for at least four months.

If we miss our goal now, we'll give up a crucial opportunity to help reach our legislative goals. Your contribution -- right now -- will help ensure that doesn't happen.

Thanks for standing with me once again.

Very truly yours,

Jay Inslee
