

As Public Lands Commissioner, I made a promise to ensure that future generations of Washingtonians are able to appreciate our state’s farms, forests, and communities just as I have. And I never break a promise.

That’s why I spearheaded programs like the Wildfire Ready Neighbors Program and Climate Resiliency Plan and have fought for groundbreaking new investments in how our state fights wildfires and defends our lands and waters, and keeps our public lands working for the public good.

The impacts of climate change continue to bear down on all of us, and I’m running for governor to make good on my promise and deliver tangible results that protect our land, waters, and communities for generations to come – and create jobs and opportunities throughout Washington along the way.

But, RANDY, I can’t do it alone. Will you join my team and pitch in what you’re able so I can continue fighting to keep the Evergreen State evergreen?
